

COVID-19 and Alienation

By Joan T. Kloth-Zanard

04-15-2020

COVID-19 has a silver lining of sorts for alienated parents. We are seeing one of two major things happen.

1) In some cases, parents, who previously were alienating and impeding with the relationship, are so desperate to not have their kids 24/7 plus having to educate them, that they are now allowing the other parent access. This is a good thing because they cannot now go backwards and say that the other parent is no good. They were good enough in a crisis, then they are good enough for everyday care too.

2) Then there are those who have poured on the alienation tactics including not even allowing remote virtual access. These alienators are proving that they are the problem and that they cannot even do what is in the best interest of the children. The children and alienated parent have no idea how the other is doing and this just causes more anxiety, stress and PTSD in them. This shows that the alienator is the problem.

I have been writing to our legislators and judges and chief justices asking them to please open the family courts up virtually to deal with these custodial interferences as they are having devastating affects on the children.

If you are finding the other parent is using COVID-19 to further alienate you and commit Custodial Interference, please reach out to us. www.pas-intervention.org