

Have you ever consulted with a mental health practitioner about your parents high conflict divorce experienced as a child or adolescent?

Are you over 21 years of age?

If 'yes', then please read on...

If you identify as an adult child of high conflict divorce, otherwise known as severe parental alienation (SPA) and have spoken to a mental health practitioner about it, then we would like to hear from you.

We are interested in your experience of speaking with a mental health practitioner about the issue of SPA. If you would like to share this experience with us, research will be conducted as an informal interview, lasting approximately 60 minutes.

This is a great opportunity for you to contribute to furthering the education and practices of mental health practitioners, which may lead to an improvement in front line supports and services to other adult survivors of SPA.

If you would like to participate in this study, or would like further information, then please contact the Student Researcher Alyse Price-Tobler via email alyse.price-tobler@research.usc.edu.au and please let us know which country you are residing in. Thank you in advance.

Please note, Participation is subject to the number of expressions of interest, suitability and availability. This study is solely about your experience with mental health practitioners and not about your actual experience with severe parental alienation. Privacy and confidentiality is strictly adhered to in accordance with ethical guidelines. Thankyou.
