

Parental Alienating Behaviors are Family Violence

What is family violence?

Family violence refers to all types of abuse that occur in families, including physical, sexual, psychological, and financial abuse, as well as neglect.

Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, 2013; Tolan, Gorman-Smith, & Henry, 2006

What are parental alienating behaviors?

Parental alienating behaviors are a parent’s persistent use of patterns of behaviors over time to harm the child’s relationship with their other parent. Alienating parents use many different behaviors, such as badmouthing the alienated parent to the child and others, interfering with their contact, and enlisting the child as an “ally” against them.

Baker, 2020; Harman, Kruk, & Hines, 2018; Harman & Matthewson, 2020

Parental alienating behaviors are child abuse

Making a child believe a parent abandoned and does not love them, or that the parent is dangerous or bad, is psychological abuse. Alienated children’s developmental needs are also often neglected by alienating parents. In severe cases, children need protection from these psychologically abusive behaviors.

Baker, 2020; Warshak, 2015

Parental alienating behaviors are intimate partner violence

Parental alienating behaviors are direct and indirect attacks made by an alienating parent toward the alienated parent to harm and control them. The children are used as weapons in these attacks, and they become collateral damage in the process. Domestic violence researchers label these same behaviors as a form of coercive control.

Harman, Kruk & Hines, 2018; Harman & Matthewson, 2020

Parental alienating behaviors are coercively controlling

The alienating parent’s intent is to manipulate and control the alienated parent’s actions and outcomes. The alienated parent experiences negative outcomes if they do not comply with the alienating parent’s demands or threats, such as not being able to see their children. The coercively controlling behavior of the alienating parent leads to their having greater control and dominance over the alienated parent, limits their ability to make decisions and be respected, and undermines their parental authority.

Hamberger, Larsen, & Lehrner, 2017; Harman & Matthewson, 2020

Most families affected by parental alienation are not "hybrid cases"

Compared to other forms of abuse, coercive controlling behaviors are not often reciprocated by the victim. This form of abuse creates power imbalances such that the victim has little power or influence in the family. Describing such families as “hybrids” implies that both parents are to blame—the alienated parent is then blamed for being the victim of the alienating parent’s coercive controlling behaviors, when it only takes one person to create a hostile environment.

Springfield, IL: Charles C Thomas Publisher.	Book chapter reviewing the empirical literature that supports the use of the Five-Factor Model for the assessment and consequences of PA, and to address misinformation about PA.	The extant literature supports the core tenets of PA theory, that a child should be considered alienated only when all five factors of the Five-Factor Model are present in a family, and that PA is child psychological abuse.
Hamberger, L. K., Larsen, S. E., & Lehrner, A. (2017). Coercive control in intimate partner violence. Aggression &amp; Violence Behavior, 37 , 1-11.	A literature review of how coercive control has been conceptualized, defined, operationalized, and measured. Summary and critique of measures used to assess coercive control in intimate partner violence research.	At least three facets of coercive control are identified: 1) intentionality or goal orientation in the abuser (versus motivation), 2) a negative perception of the controlling behavior by the victim, and 3) the ability of the abuser to obtain control through the deployment of a credible threat.

Systematic review of the scientific literature on parental alienation and the behaviors that cause it.	Parental alienating behaviors that have been documented in the scientific literature meet criteria for definitions of family violence: both intimate partner violence (IPV) and child abuse.

Prevalence of adults who are the targets of parental alienating behaviors and their impact: Results from three national polls. Child &amp; Youth Services Review, 106 , 1-13.	Three national polls in the U.S. and Canada using survey panels selected to represent the nations' demographic characteristics.	Parents who were the non-reciprocating target of parental alienating behaviors were more likely to be moderately to severely alienated from a child than those who were the primary perpetrators or were mutually engaged in the behaviors.

Parental alienating behaviors that have been documented in the scholarly literature fit clearly into power and control wheel categories that detail coercive controlling behaviors of abusive parents. Alienating parents are abusive parents towards children and the other parent.

A critical review of research on victims of different forms of intimate partner violence: intimate terrorism, situational couple violence, and mutual control. Two studies were reported on the impact of violence on male victims.	Intimate terrorism (aka coercively controlling violence) is characterized by abusive behaviors that are low in mutuality. Men who are victims of intimate terrorism were found to have worse outcomes than those who reciprocated the abuse.
